Editor's Letter

Welcome and thank you for purchasing this the first edition of Britain, My Nation, a bi-monthly magazine published in support of and to publicise British Nationalism.

On the 7th February 1967 a coalition of small “extreme” right wing groups joined together to form the National Front. The original version of the British National Party, the League of Empire Loyalists, the Racial Preservation Society and some branches of the Anglo-Rhodesian Society and a little later the Greater Britain Movement threw aside all differences to join together for the greater good, that being, “to work for the restoration of full national sovereignty for Britain in all affairs”. Nearly 60 years later our nation is almost unrecognisable from what it was in 1967, in my view solely as a result of the impact of mass immigration. We are now in an extremely desperate situation and need a similar unification to that of 1967, whereby all the Nationalist parties currently in existence would do well to remember how and why the National Front was formed and work towards that end or we might as well give up now. One of my aims in publishing this magazine is to encourage that unification and also to bring back into the fold those who have given up on our cause. Despite views to the contrary THERE IS STILL TIME!

If immigration and its consequences were not enough of a problem in themselves we are also faced with seemingly ever-increasing interference and attempts to control how we live our lives. Everything we need to manage our lives is made available via the internet and the associated use of mobile phones is effectively destroying all social cohesion and interaction and turning our people into a nation of zombies. That is why this publication will be hard-copy only, in the way that magazines used to be and indeed some Nationalist magazines still are. Heritage and Destiny, Candour and The Supplement amongst others are all excellent examples that follow this path and I would recommend taking out subscriptions unless you have done so already. See our advertisements on page 19 for a selection of good Nationalist magazines available.

Britain, My Nation will only be available by post on subscription and not via the internet or by email. Having said that, articles, letters, newspaper cuttings, and general comments for consideration for inclusion in future editions are welcomed and can be sent by email to: - britainmynation@yahoo.com

Britain, My Nation can only be taken forward with the help and support of our readers, the like-minded Nationalists within our community so I thank you again for your support.

What Does It Mean To Be British?

It seems that anyone from any country in the world has the right to profess their pride in being from that country, unless, of course, you are British and indigenous British at that. Yes, we all know that true Britons, white Britons, are as far as I am aware the only race who are criticised and abused for standing up and saying they are proud to be British (and white). Why is that? Is it because that we once ruled over the greatest empire this world has ever known and those over whom we ruled feel so oppressed they attempt to belittle us? Who knows? What we do know, however, is that there are those who have a massive chip on their shoulders and feel it necessary to undermine our fantastic historical achievements by, amongst other methods, increasingly attempting to rewrite that history to imply that we owe everything to immigrants who came to this country over hundreds of years, when in reality immigration in any significant numbers has only occurred in the last 75 years.

Additionally any attempts at defining what it means to be British are themselves derided by the media suggesting that there is no such thing and that we are a nation of immigrants and anyone can 'become British'. As mentioned above, of all the countries and races in the world, it seems this stance is only taken against the British.

So what does it mean to be British? I guess it is difficult to define, in as much as it is difficult to define any race, but if you are truly British, you know that you feel the pride of knowing that you were born here to parents with ancestors that can be traced back over many generations. You have an intrinsic sense of belonging to this land with its culture, language and traditions, all of which bind us together. We know what it is to be British because we know what it is not. Perhaps that is part of the problem where, although we, the British, can decide that certain things are not acceptable, and are in fact alien to us, those who seek to undermine our status, those we reject, make every effort to actually reject us.

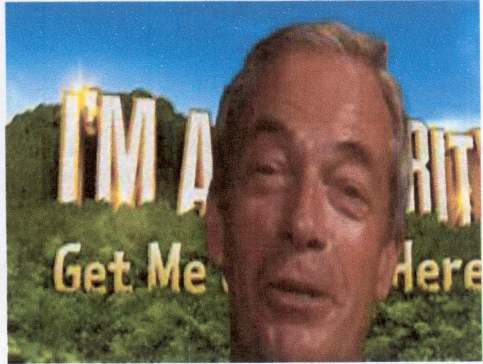

The 'powers that be' are currently allowing the biggest ever wave of immigration into this country but no-one can admit why this is happening or why it is necessary. What is happening though is that our sense of Britishness is under extreme pressure, our institutions are under great strain, the NHS, our schools, our legal system are all becoming unfit for purpose as the British people are being sent to the back of the queue with those that do not belong taking preference.

Many talk about 'The Great Replacement', a theme that is still referred to as a conspiracy theory but, we, the British, know what is happening, we can see what is going on and we do not like it. The day will come when the slumbering lion will stir and declare that enough is enough and when that day happens I am sure we will witness the greatest level of civil unrest this country has ever seen. I wonder if our leaders are prepared for that!

In the News - Farage

Nigel Farage in 'I'm A Celebrity'

Although not watching it, or any other so-called 'celebrity' based programmes I must admit to a passing interest in the recent series of 'I'm A Celebrity'. In this series I did, for a change, recognise one of these celebrities, and it seems that the inclusion of Farage has made the series more of a success than normal with the British public, so much so that the darling of the populist right reached the final. His inclusion and subsequent third placing has caused a huge meltdown amongst those who see Farage as a 'far-right' politician who should not be given a platform anywhere let alone on prime-time mainstream television. Although Farage is not recognised by true Nationalists as being 'one of us', I believe this event to be worthy of discussion here on the basis that he is extremely popular amongst so called middle-Englanders and the British people in general. They still see him as being the saviour who orchestrated our withdrawal from the corrupt European Union and, although they would not wish to put their heads above the parapet too much by supporting a real Nationalist party that would actually address and provide real solutions for the problems created by immigration, they feel that showing support for Farage is as radical as they feel comfortable with. We are talking about millions of decent British people who are effectively sitting on the fence for fear of being called racist or fascist or whatever the latest term is that the left use to belittle and abuse those who they do not agree with, or more appropriately those who do not agree with them. However, we all know that due to overuse these terms are essentially meaningless and should hold no fear for them, certainly if they came to terms with the fact that there are millions of them.

So what would it take to knock these people from the safety of that fence? It seems that the mass immigration of young men, large scale demonstrations in support of Islamic regimes, regular prayer meetings in our streets rather than in the thousands of mosques created for that purpose and the blatant replacement of traditional white British families on television, particularly in advertisements and in the media generally, as well as the failure of our security services in dealing with, but kow-towing to what is the real problem seems not enough. Perhaps an event of a catastrophic nature is required, terrorist attacks, for example, or mass rioting, or the assassination of politicians or royalty. Of course, these are all events we would never wish on our fellow Britons but for the greater good this might be what it takes for our fellow countrymen to get off the fence, rise up and put right the wrongs of the last fifty years!

Or Not In The News - Islam

On October 7th last year we saw the most horrific attack, on civilian's, in Israeli history when Hamas terrorists from the Palestinian Gaza strip attacked and killed over 350 innocent people who were attending the Supernova Festival.

Since the initial horror expressed by the West regarding this cold-blooded attack and the subsequent abuses of dead bodies and the kidnapping of men, women and children, the unsurprising retaliatory attack on Gaza by Israel has turned the outrage and sympathy on its' head. We have seen huge demonstrations each week, in London and other Muslim strongholds, protesting against Israel and the devastation it is causing in Gaza. Palestinian flags are to be seen flying here and the anti-Jewish protests are causing much concern amongst the Jewish community.

Nationalists have generally held the view that Jews, by having overwhelming representation within both the media and banking industry, are responsible for the problems in our country. This may be true and although I believe our affairs should not be controlled by those with allegiances outside of our nation I cannot choose either side, in this conflict, over the other.

However what I do believe is that, over the last twenty years or so, the Muslim interference in our country has become the major threat we are facing and the recent massive support for them as a result of recent events is very dangerous indeed. Even before this Muslims have been regularly making shows of strength by their mass prayer meetings in our streets rather than in the high on 2,000 mosques and this is a blatant challenge to our authority. On top of this we have seen the fear that the authorities have shown when mass rapes of young women and girls have taken place in towns and cities across the country and also the two-tier policing shown when contrasting how these recent demonstrations are policed compared with any pro-British demonstrations. This is, not to mention how our government is facilitating the mass immigration and subsequent hospitality of largely fighting-age Muslims who arrive wearing designer clothes, carrying charged and paid for mobile phones and sporting recent neat haircuts.

However, the mainstream media, our law-enforcement agencies and our government are all in denial that we have a problem and this gives me ample cause to want us to join together and challenge what is happening as the situation is absolutely NOT acceptable.

Can We Save Our Decaying Country?

My Nationalist awakening occurred in the early 1990's when I returned to England after having spent four years living and working in Germany. To me, it appeared that, in a relatively short period of time, there had been a huge deterioration in conditions, in the general fabric of the Nation I once knew. On my return I was initially located in London, Lambeth no less, and this tended to exacerbate the problems that I saw were seemingly destroying my Britain. The signs in the borough referred to it as being a 'nuclear free zone' so I knew something was going terribly wrong.

More than thirty years later we have all seen the further deterioration of our Nation and the changes in our bigger towns and cities that have largely resulted from the dilution of the indigenous population by uncontrolled and ever-increasing immigration. When comparing images of these places as they are today with those of the 1990's and before we can see a massive difference in general environmental conditions and those who live there, both in terms of ethnicity and also in their general appearance. The pride and self-respect that the population once had in terms of how they presented themselves and in the upkeep of their homes and gardens has, in so many, been replaced by a slovenly personal appearance and homes that, due to neglect, are little better than slums.

Recently I spent a few days in Bournemouth staying in a once grand hotel, built in Victorian times, one in which General Eisenhower debated Second World War D-Day landing plans with Field Marshall Montgomery over lunch. Now the building is in need of much work to bring it back to the standards of those times. Internally the decoration and furniture were all very tired looking with carpets and curtains certainly having seen better days. Externally there were cracks beginning to appear in the walls which were also in desperate need of a good coat of paint. All in all, despite an enjoyable stay there, it could have been so much better if only the townsfolk and local council had made an effort to maintain it to make it a more attractive place to stay.

In the town centre an air of despondency and decay was apparent to the extent that it felt as if everyone had simply given up making any effort to create a positive environment and were just plodding on as everything around them fell into disrepair. Readers will undoubtedly recognise similarities to a town or city close to them, with nobody, least of all their elected representatives seemingly doing anything to invest in recreating the vibrant towns and cities they once were. The self-respect and pride the British people once had seems to have all but evaporated as so many walk around in a permanent grey clouded depression looking as if they have almost given up on life, with all but a few caring not about their fellow man.

In future issues I will continue on this theme and also outline how we should restore that pride and self-respect and how we can knit communities together to work towards our common goal of making our Nation great once more.

Concert Review – The Bootleg Beatles

In issue no. 113 of the Heritage and Destiny magazine, I read with interest, the article 'Should Nationalists Follow and/or Support Professional Sports Teams' as written by Hugh Perry. Consequently I was prompted into writing a review of a recent music concert I attended, that being the Bootleg Beatles, a tribute band to, well, The Beatles.

The musical tastes of Nationalists varies immensely and I suspect that many deem, what is generally termed as 'pop' or 'rock' music, as a form of music that should be avoided at all costs. However, I make no excuses for liking the music I do, there is nothing I can do about it. This love of music started during the 1960's, when I was very young, as our home environment was never complete without there being music in the background primarily from the radio which was switched on from the early morning. In fact, my Mother recently told me that whilst I was still in the pram she 'used to put the tranny in with me'. (Tranny being short for transistor radio, of course!). Consequently I have a great love for the music of those times and many memories of the massive social changes that were associated with it. In retrospect those times have much to answer for in relation to the ridiculously liberal world that we now live in, with The Beatles bearing much of the responsibility for those changes. I was then too young (honestly!) to have seen the Beatles perform in concert back in the 1960's but being a lover of their music meant that, when I first witnessed a tribute band called The Bootleg Beatles in concert in the early 1990's, I became a big fan of theirs, with it being said that "... they play the Beatles songs live in concert better than the Beatles ever did". I have seen the band in concert nearly every year since and so as soon as tickets for the latest tour became available tickets were booked for their show in the Bath Forum.

It may be of interest to readers that the Colston Hall in Bristol had been our venue of choice ever since the mid-1970's until recently when they closed the venue for refurbishment and on reopening renamed it as the Bristol Beacon. This decision was made as a result of a small minority of people becoming a tad upset about the association with Edward Colston, who was a slave trader in the 17th and 18th centuries, (as well as being a major philanthropist in the city). Consequently we now use the Bath Forum instead. The Bath Forum is the third largest venue in the south west with a capacity of 1,640 and is a wonderful art deco building with lacquered wood fixtures and fittings and stunning decoration. Originally opening in 1934 as a cinema, it became a bingo hall and dance school in 1969 before Bath City Church took the building over in 1989 and restored it to its former glory after years of neglect.

As mentioned, The Bootleg Beatles are a tribute band and they attempt to replicate Beatles songs using the same equipment and being dressed in the same styles as the Beatles themselves. The attention to detail is impressive and as well as bearing some resemblance to who they represent, they sound like and perform in the same style. One impressive example of their attention to detail is that Steve White, who plays McCartney, is actually right-handed but taught himself to play the guitar left-handed as McCartney does, no mean feat as I'm sure fellow guitar players will acknowledge.

Each of the shows they perform typically consists of performances from several periods during the Beatles career with these changing from tour to tour. Each section of the show comes complete with costume and hairstyle changes.

As the lights dimmed for the show to begin we were treated to a short film display showing various news items interspersed with clips of the top entertainers and television shows of the early 1960's with a backing soundtrack of various hit tunes of the time. As this short introductory film ended four figures took to the stage with the show proper beginning as the stage lights came back up and the opening notes of the first song, Please Please Me, rang out. The band were dressed in the sharp black suits of the period and were clean-cut but had the familiar 'mop-top' hairstyles from the 1962-63 Cavern Club period. At the end of this and subsequent songs from this period, the band bowed to the audience in a very formal way and applause rang out, with the next song also being introduced by one of the band in the Beatles style of that time. The hit songs continued and were interspersed with lesser known, but nevertheless great tunes with the audience up and dancing almost immediately.

The show continued through the Beatlemania period of 1964-66, a time when the Beatles actually toured themselves, and included such hits as She Loves You, All My Loving, I Want To Hold Your Hand, A Hard Day's Night, Paperback Writer and many more. After a short break allowing for a costume (and wig) change, we were in the hippy / psychedelic period of 1967 when the attitude of the band was more relaxed, the formality of the earlier years having been set aside. The hit songs came thick and fast however and included Penny Lane, Hello Goodbye, Eleanor Rigby, Strawberry Fields Forever, All You Need Is Love and Yellow Submarine amongst others.

The final section of the show included songs from 1968-70 when they had seen the last of their touring days and concentrated on studio work. Again, a short interval as they changed clothes, wigs and guitars to replicate the appearance of the Beatles at that time. The hits still came including Ob La Di Ob La Da, Here Comes The Sun, Let It Be and more. They took their bows and disappeared off of the stage but fortunately the audience would have none of it and cheered and clapped for more and the band returned for an encore playing the songs Get Back and Hey Jude, with much audience participation in singing and dancing. And then it was all over for another year. Throughout the show the authenticity of performance and impressive musicianship almost made the audience believe they were seeing the real thing and a great time was had by all.

In the next issue of 'Britain, My Nation' look out for a supplementary article about the Legacy of the Beatles.

Which Nationalist Party? (1 of 3)

The Editor's letter outlines the need for Nationalists to unite for there to be any chance of making any ground in the political arena. Currently there are at least 16 racial and civic (often referred to as populist) nationalist parties available for us to join (there may be more so if we have missed any I am sure reader's will let us know). Over the next few issues of 'Britain, My Nation' we will look at these parties (in alphabetical order), provide social media and contact details and will compare the policy platforms on which they stand. In this issue we will be providing a very brief history, together with details of the main players in each party. I also invite the leadership of all parties listed to write to me with contributions that might help convince the readers of this magazine that their party is the one to join.

British Democratic Party are more commonly known as the British Democrats and were founded in 2013. The party chairman is Dr James Lewthwaite and deputy chairman is ex British National Party MEP Andrew Brons. The party formed soon after Andrew Brons narrowly failed in a poll to replace Nick Griffin as leader of the BNP. Other disillusioned ex-BNP members and more recently, with the demise of the For Britain Party, ex-members from that party have injected new life into the BDP. This includes ex-councillors Julian Leppert and Lawrence Rustem, both of whom polled well in recent elections. The party is the only Nationalist party with any electoral representation with several parish councillors and is currently seeing an increase in the level of political activity.

Britain First was founded in 2011 by Jim Dowson, who has since moved on, and also resulted from a split from the BNP. The leader of the party is Paul Golding, a former BNP councillor. The party also originally included Jayda Fransen as deputy leader. Britain First have campaigned quite prominently on a number of issues and gained good publicity as a result, including when President Trump retweeted a couple of the party's tweets (statements on social media platform Twitter, now known as X) but have failed to make gains electorally. Of late the party has promised shifting up a few gears.

British Freedom Party was founded in 2018 (and is not to be confused with the earlier party of the same name, now defunct) and has its HQ in Northern Ireland where leader, Jayda Fransen, is believed to reside. The BFP is also the current resting place for both financier Jim Dowson and ex-BNP chairman Nick Griffin. The party produces an occasional newspaper, The Britannia, and is also involved in the Purged TV channel. The party carries out limited activity and has made a few unsuccessful electoral attempts.

British Movement was founded in 1968 by Colin Jordan and is now led by Stephen Frost. Despite it being a small party it is still active and produces a glossy magazine, Broadsword. Although not a registered political party BM provides support to others.

British National Party was founded in 1982 by John Tyndall with current chairman being Adam Walker. The party had great success in the early part of this century, after Nick Griffin replaced Tyndall, achieving electoral success with around 50 councillors and two MEP's, had both a monthly newspaper The Voice of Freedom and a magazine, Identity. The party grew rapidly during this time but subsequent in-fighting and allegations of corruption and financial impropriety caused Griffin to resign, this being followed by a rapid decline in the fortunes of the party. Despite still having a web-site and filing accounts with the electoral commission, the party seems to be dead in the water.

Which Nationalist Party? (2 of 3)

English Democrats are a small party established in 2002 under the leadership and financial backing of solicitor Robin Tilbrook. The party has had some high points in its existence and continues to regularly contest elections. It also has a regularly updated web-site. However it unfortunately makes little impact on the Nationalist scene generally. Recently an electoral pact with UKIP has been announced such that they will not compete against each other in elections.

Heritage Party is a relatively new party founded in 2020 by ex-London Assembly UKIP member David Kurten. Kurten has a Jamaican father and consequently fits the civic nationalist profile rather than a racial one. However, the party website does list good policies and Kurten seems to maintain a decent media profile for the party but having little electoral impact as a result.

Homeland Party is a new party, founded in March 2023 and yet to be registered successfully with the Electoral Commission. The party formed as a result of a split within Patriotic Alternative and is led by Kenny Smith, a long term and very proactive Nationalist with a firm belief in community politics. A very good web-site shows this party is committed to the Nationalist struggle but has yet to be tested electorally even though it has independent representatives on several councils.

National Front still exists but as a shadow of its former self having its heyday in the 1970's and has sadly been on the decline ever since. Founded in 1967 (see Editor's letter on page 3), current Chairman is Tony Martin and with a small membership and consequent lack of resources, the party struggles to make any impact although managing to contest the occasional election having little success.

National Housing Party UK were registered with the Electoral Commission in April 2022 and is led by John Lawrence. The party seems to have a limited agenda albeit with two main aims – a complete halt to immigration and to leave the 1951 UN Refugee Convention. Both admirable aims but with that alone the party has little prospect of becoming a main player on the Nationalist stage even though it has contested elections.

National Support Detachment were formed in 2023 as a result of ex-soldier Alek Yerbury splitting from Patriotic Alternative. The organisation was formed to 'provide support to Nationalism in Britain' and has been active in demonstrations taking place across the country as a result of illegal immigrants being housed in hotels etc. It seems that Yerbury is hoping to register the party with the Electoral Commission in 2024. It appears that the NSD is trying to become established on military lines and it may well be that this organisation surprises us all, but we will see what progress it makes once it has become successfully registered as a political party and is able to contest elections.

New British Union is another unregistered party founded in 2013 by ex-BNP member Gary Raikes. Membership is small and it is difficult to see where an openly fascist party can make any ground in the 21st century even if the cause is an admirable one. The party does achieve a good media coverage despite its size and maintains a regular presence on social media sites and has a good web-site and recent postings indicate activity and membership is increasing.

Which Nationalist Party? (3 of 3)

Patriotic Alternative is currently the most prominent of the parties listed even though it is seemingly struggling to achieve a party registration with the Electoral Commission. Founded in July 2019 by ex-BNP Director of Publicity amongst other positions, Mark Collett. The party believes that community politics is at the root of a way forward and has an ambitious timetable for achieving its objectives. It is very active physically and on social media. The party also makes headlines in the media regularly and despite a recent split (see Homeland Party) looks likely to become even more popular in the future.

Reclaim Party was set up by actor Laurence Fox in October 2020 after he began publicly discussing the concerns he had for our country. As a result he was essentially “cancelled” by his profession and the media. MP Andrew Bridgen, who was also treated in the same way as Fox but for questioning the mainstream narrative on “covid”, was also a high profile member of the party until he resigned in late December last year. Results of elections contested so far have shown that the party is unlikely to increase its number of elected representatives despite a good media profile and publicity.

Reform UK is another party with celebrity involvement. Formed by Nigel Farage by rebranding the Brexit Party after it served its purpose. Multi-millionaire Richard Tice leads the party which also includes some well-known political names and with plenty of funding it has ambitious plans for future elections. During December the party confirmed that it will stand candidates in every seat in the UK and, unlike 2019, will not stand down in any seats. It is currently riding high in opinion polls with those who have followed Farage in the past now aligning with the party and pollsters suggesting it may obtain enough support at the next election to scupper the Conservatives, with polls showing 11% support.

UKIP is another party that is a shadow of its former self, being the most successful of all parties listed. The party, currently led by ex-Conservative MP Neil Hamilton was founded 30 years ago. It came to prominence under the leadership of Nigel Farage who oversaw UKIP's greatest successes particularly in the 2010's at which time it had two MPs and was the largest party in the UK's contingent in the European Parliament. After the UK left the EU the party lost Farage and the massive support it then had. The party has essentially been in turmoil ever since despite putting on a brave face even now allowing ex-members of the BNP/NF to join when once it was vehemently against it. It still maintains a presence on the general political scene due to its earlier successes, but fails to capitalise on this with poor electoral performance in recent years and despite its efforts is unlikely to change this, however they are set to benefit from the recent electoral pact that has been agreed with the English Democrats.

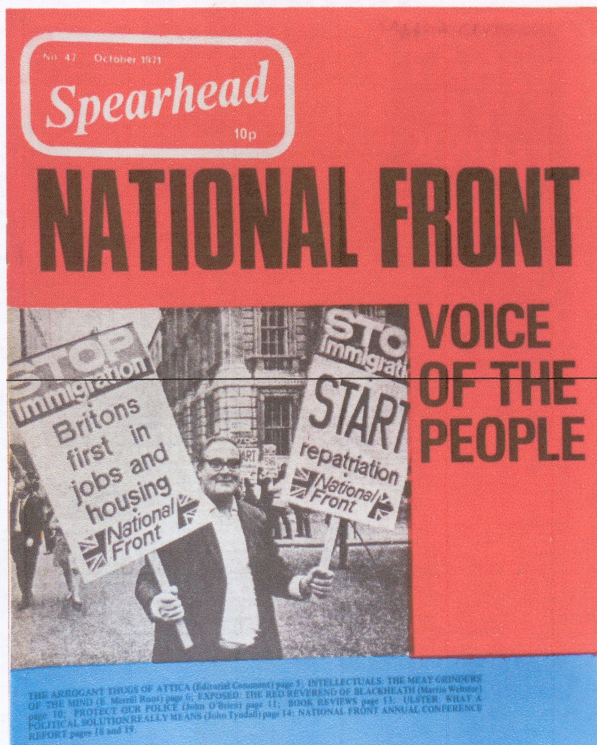

Since planning and drafting this article it appears that several parties are actually making attempts to work together and not vote-split and this comes as very good news indeed. It is, however, just a beginning and much more needs to be done. Heritage and Destiny magazine has also been pushing this agenda for some time now and all serious Nationalists need to heed this message, particularly with a general election having to take place no later than the 28th January 2025. Whatever happens Nationalists need to step up and the thousands of us who have been dormant for so long need now to get back in the fray and do our bit to take our country back!

The Best of Spearhead Magazine – October 1971 (1)

The next few pages are intended to serve as a tribute to Spearhead magazine. This will be a monthly feature and I will make no excuses for taking up space with the reproduction of items from the magazine that I consider to be one of the best, if not the best, Nationalist magazine there has been. Many of the articles and much of the comment still have great relevance today and there is much content that will surprise the reader regarding that.

Spearhead was published from 1967 to 2005 by John Tyndall (1934-2005), one time chairman of both the National Front (1972-74 & 75-80) and the British National Party (1982-99). The monthly magazine ran into well over 400 issues, which was quite a feat, one that I can't imagine will be repeated, although I would love to be proven wrong.

I trust the reader will enjoy The Best of Spearhead as much as I have done when researching and reproducing the items. In this edition of 'Britain My Nation' we look at Spearhead issue number 47 from October 1971, over 50 years ago!

NF ANNUAL CONFERENCE 1971

National Front organisers expressed both surprise and delight at the large number of members who made the effort to attend the movement's Annual General Meeting, which was held in the sumptuous large hall of the Abercorn Rooms, Bishopsgate, London, on Saturday September 11th. Although the A.G.M. is not the most exciting event in the diaries of many members, nearly 200 people from NF Branches all over the country assembled to take part in the management of their organisation.

An especially welcome token of the high morale of the membership was the large collection taken at the end of the day following an appeal by John Tyndall. Despite the fact that many of those present had to meet heavy travel and accommodation expenses in order to be able to attend the meeting, more than £300 was collected. This sum is the largest amount ever collected at an NF A.G.M.

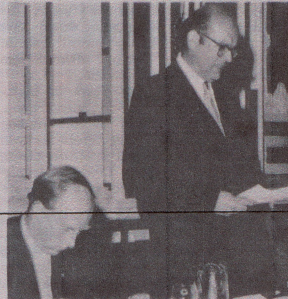

The first elections for places on the governing body of the movement under the terms of the constitutional amendment agreed to at the Extra-ordinary General Meeting took place smoothly and resulted in no major upsets. Results, in order of votes cast for each candidate, were as follows:—

ELECTED

(N.B. Names grouped in brackets indicate equal votes)

Mr. John O'Brien, Chairman of Directorate; Mr. John Tyndall, Central Administration; Miss Clare Macdonald, Central Administration; (Mr. Joe Hyde, Wolverhampton Branch; Mr. Ken Taylor, Hitchin Branch); Mr. Peter Applin, South Herts Branch; Mr. Martin Webster, Central Administration; Mr. Martin Vaux, Guildford Branch; Mr. Terry Savage, Islington Branch; Mr. Peter McMenemie, Central Administration; (Mr. Peter Williams, Peckham Branch; Mr. Gordon Brown, Central Administration; Mr. Tom Lamb, Wandsworth Branch); Mr. Alex Marshall, Central Administration; (Mr. Graham Manning, Bristol Branch; Mr. Ted Arthurton, Peckham Branch; Mr. Walter Barton, Manchester Branch); Mr. Colin Cody, Peckham Branch; Mr. Frank Stockham, Bristol Branch; Mr. Frank Clifford, Brighton Branch.

NF CHAIRMAN SPEAKS

Unsuccessful candidates were Mr. Eric Russell, Kingston Branch; Mr. Don Williams, West London Branch; Mr. Joe Jones, Ilford Branch; Mr. Keith Stevens, Bexley Branch; and Mr. Bill Palmer, Tunbridge Wells Branch. Rev. Brian Green's nomination was withdrawn, much to the disappointment of many members, but who look forward to seeing his name on the ballot papers next year.

NO CHANGE IN NAME

As expected, the motion which caused the greatest amount of heat was that which proposed that the movement should change its name from the National Front to the National Party. Before the debate on the motion was able to begin, a flurry of points of order from the floor established that the motion was in contravention of standing orders in that, as a proposed amendment to the Constitution, it had not been put on the order paper as being proposed by the Directorate as required by the Constitution.

FRANK STOCKHAM

Bristol Branch Organiser and Chairman for the day calls a speaker to order.

It was explained that the Directorate was not of a single mind on the issue, and so the Directorate felt that it was a matter for the membership as a whole to decide upon without special Directorate influence, and as a result the Directorate had permitted the motion to be put as an ordinary member's motion.

Objections to the procedure adopted were sustained by the Chairman, Mr. Frank Stockham, as they were technically correct, but in order to comply with the will of the majority of members at the meeting who clearly wished to debate the issue, a motion was put to the meeting and carried that standing orders be suspended for the period of time necessary to debate the motion.

Those in favour of the change felt that the word "Front" had an aura of "extremism", and unlike the word "Party" was not understood by ordinary electors. Furthermore, it was said that there were a number of disreputable foreign movements which used the word "Front". These factors, they claimed, contributed to the movement not achieving the optimum rate of progress that was necessary.

Opponents to the motion felt that to change the name of the organisation now would result in it having to begin all over again in terms of becoming well-known. Furthermore, they said that there were plenty of disreputable organisations which used the word "Party". The movement had the right policies, and if progress was not as fast as all would wish, then this was due to a hostile press and the need for all members to work harder, not to the use of the word "Front".

The motion which was proposed by

TOM LAMB
Organiser of Wandsworth Branch, and member of E.T.U., makes a passionate point in opposition to Industrial Relations Act. III.

Miss B. Manning and Miss Clare Macdonald of Ilford Branch, was lost on a show of hands.

Perhaps the greatest surprise of the day was the easy passing of the motion proposed by Mr. Frank Clifford of Brighton Branch that the Constitutional amendments passed at the previous E.G.M. in respect of elections to the Directorate were "unsatisfactory" in that they were "more Left Wing than anything operated by the Conservative, Labour and Liberal parties" and that the new Directorate must consider the matter carefully prior to presenting the next A.G.M. with proposals for a revised electoral system.

OTHER MOTIONS CARRIED

A declaration of intent that should Britain be dragged into the Common Market against the wish of the British people, a National Front Government would annul Britain's commitment to the Treaty of Rome. (Proposed by Mr. Frank Clifford, Seconded by Mr. John O'Brien.)

A resolve that the movement will organise a campaign to persuade the Port of London Authority to reverse its decision to allow Asian Immigrants to use the River Thames as a burial ground. (Proposed by Mr. Martin Vaux, Seconded by Mr. Peter Applin.)

A re-affirmation of the movement's intention to halt and reverse the present trend whereby the countryside of Britain is being converted into a concrete jungle. (Proposed by Mr. Peter Williams, Seconded by Mrs. Helena Bennett, Peckham Branch.)

An expression of sympathy for the victims of I.R.A. gunmen and a demand for the re-establishment of the Northern Ireland 'B Special' Police Force. (Proposed by Mr. Malcolm Skeggs, Seconded by Mr. Peter Christian, Greenwich Branch.)

A resolve that the National Front engage the Race Relations Board in public confrontations so that the sinister powers and Police-State methods of the Race industry can be exposed to the public at large. (Proposed by Mr. Martin Webster, Seconded by Mr. John O'Brien.)

PC - Making A Monkey Of Us All

Sadly the British people en masse currently seem unable to stand up to challenge the barrage of political correctness we now face. Even the term 'political correctness' seems to have been superseded by 'wokeness' or 'wokery'. By not speaking out against this nonsense it continues to make monkeys out of all of us, despite its absurdity. Join with us in challenging this at every stage and laugh at those who attempt to talk the gobble-de-gook created to replace the real English language.

Examples of the madness over recent years will be published in each edition of 'Britain. My Nation' and readers are invited to send in examples they have come across (for contact details see page 3).

BC and AD – The BBC (what a surprise!) has dropped the use of the terms Before Christ (BC) and Anno Domini (AD) on at least one of their programmes deciding that the terms 'Before Common Era' or BCE and 'Common Era' or CE are more appropriate.

EASTER EGGS – A school in Seattle now refers to 'spring spheres' instead of Easter eggs to avoid causing offence to people who do not celebrate Easter. (Editor - With Easter just around the corner take a look at the display of eggs in your local shop and see how many refer to Easter, few if any, I would suggest).

IT'S CHRISTMAS! – There seems to be a move towards wishing people a 'happy holiday' in December, rather than the traditional 'Happy Christmas'. How many times did you notice that over the Christmas period?

PAEDOPHILES – This is a particularly evil example whereby in some circles paedophiles are now referred to as 'Minor Attracted Persons' in an attempt it seems to remove the stigma from those so afflicted!

'TAKING THE KNEE' – Choosing to kneel on the pitch before the start of a game, as it seems many sportsmen, particularly footballers, have done, is supposedly a protest against racial injustice. It presumably results from when the Black Lives Matter movement was created after the death of George Floyd. However, it has nothing to do with equality, more so for white people to appear subservient and guilty for being white.

And so it goes on ... more examples needed please!

A Time In History

This regular feature will list some events in British history which took place on dates during the months covered by this publication.

February

2nd 1914 – The Cub Scouts are founded at Robertsbridge in Sussex.

10th 1981 – The National Coal Board plans to close 50 pits employing 30,000 miners; the miners press for a national miners' strike.

14th 1852 – The first patient, Eliza Armstrong, is admitted to the Children's Hospital in Great Ormond Street, London.

18th 1516 – Queen Mary I (Mary Tudor) is born at Greenwich Palace, the daughter of Henry VIII and Catherine of Aragon.

20th 1874 – Benjamin Disraeli succeeds Gladstone as Prime Minister.

21st 1741 – The agricultural pioneer Jethro Tull dies near Hungerford.

25th 1308 – Coronation of Edward II.

28th 1155 – Henry, son of Henry II is born.

March

1st 1711 – The Spectator is first published, succeeding The Tatler as the great British review.

4th 1967 – The first North Sea gas is pumped ashore at Easington.

18th 979 – King Edward the Martyr is murdered at Corfe Castle and succeeded by Ethelred the Unready.

18th 1986 – Income tax is reduced to 29%.

19th 1813 – The explorer and missionary David Livingstone is born at Blantyre.

20th 1413 – Henry IV dies of a stroke as he prays at Edward the Confessor's Shrine in the Jerusalem Chamber at Westminster Abbey, it having been prophesied that he would die in Jerusalem.

26th 1934 – Driving tests are introduced.

29th 1851 – Marble Arch is moved from Buckingham Palace to its present site.

Dear Sirs

Thank you for your sample copy issue of Britain My Nation. I thoroughly enjoyed reading it and applaud your efforts in trying to create a serious focus for Nationalist unity. I, as you know, have subscribed and look forward to the next issue at the end of March and have already recommended the magazine to comrades old and new. I wish you every success with your efforts.

Yours faithfully, A.D, London.

Dear Robert

I believe that a good majority of true British people are very concerned about what is happening in this country, what with the impact the vociferous minority of weird and wonderful woke lefties seem to be having. They are seemingly running the agenda for all things anti-British and the time is long overdue when the British Lion roared once more. I am often told that it is too late and what has happened in the last fifty years is irreversible. Whilst we still have those who are prepared to raise their heads above the parapet and tell the truth there is hope. I hope your magazine goes from strength to strength and motivates those who are currently “resting”!

Yours sincerely, Pete B, Bristol.

Dear Editor

I write enclosing my subscription for your magazine. I have been disillusioned with politics for some time now, particularly the confusion caused by the number of political parties that currently exist at the right of the political spectrum. It is high time that the differences that exist between all of these parties were overcome for the greater good of our race and nation before it is too late. I look forward to how this progresses.

Best regards, Jane T., Oxford.

Dear Robert

Good luck with Britain My Nation and thank you for the advance copy. We certainly need to rebuild a movement that seriously challenges the enemies of our people and take back and restore all that has been destroyed. You have my full support.

Best wishes, Tony K., Manchester.

The Supplement
Issue number 180
October 2023
As the recent Tory conference, Kevin Gaudinoff MP gave a speech, to the effect that the UK was not about slavery or racism, but was the best country in the world to be a slave.
Gaudinoff stated on before the Tory faithful and said:
"Britain is the best country in the world to be a slave"
to this we are greeted with rapturous applause Gaudinoff is the Tory Treasurer, Secretary and chairman of the conference. He is also known to be the most Tory leader. But what of the virtual silence of the many black, Chinese and other ethnic minorities, many of whom fought for independence and freedom and are now being treated as slaves? Is it really a better world to be a slave? Is it really a better world to be a slave? Is it really a better world to be a slave? Is it really a better world to be a slave?
